

FINDING PEACE PRESENTS

30-Day Mental Wellness & Reflection Journal

A guided month of honest self-check-ins, grounded presence, and evening reflection

DIRECT · REFLECTIVE · REAL

Welcome Note

Welcome to Finding Peace.

This journal is not here to help you perform healing.

It is here to help you tell the truth.

Some days that truth will be clean and clear. Some days it will be messy, defensive, numb, angry, ashamed, tired, or hard to name. You do not need to fix that before you write. You do not need the right words before you begin.

This journal asks for something braver than positivity. It asks for honesty. It asks you to notice what is real, name what is heavy, track what shifts, and stop abandoning yourself in the process.

You are allowed to be in progress.

You are allowed to be unclear.

You are allowed to have a nervous system, a history, and a hard day.

Come to these pages as you are.

Write what is true.

Leave what is not.

How to Use This Journal

MORNING INTENTION

Start here. Set the tone before the day starts setting it for you. This is not about becoming a better version of yourself by noon. It is about naming what matters and moving with intention instead of default.

MID-DAY GROUNDING

Stop the momentum. Interrupt the autopilot. Check what is actually happening before stress, shame, craving, or survival mode starts making decisions for you. This is where you pause, tell the truth, and take your next step on purpose.

EVENING REFLECTION

Look back without putting yourself on trial. Notice what hit, what helped, what pulled you off center, and what you want to remember. Reflection is not punishment. It is how you stop repeating what you never stop to see.

BRAIN DUMP / UNFILTERED SPACE

Use the bottom of each page for whatever did not fit neatly into a prompt. Anger. grief. cravings. resentment. relief. confusion. half-finished thoughts. Write it down raw.
